Key Questions:

How is the intrinsic capacity to feel accommodated alongside more rationalist, intellectual models of the early enlightenment? How are feelings and emotions distinguished/linked within medical, philosophical, and literary discourses? How are feelings discussed as a pathway to truth and/or as a hindrance to potential truth? How does literature help to install emotionality (e.g. empathy, fear etc.) as a key component in the enlightenment's 'production' of what it means to be human(e)?

Week 5. Authorship: Anonymity & Pseudonymity, Nicholas Cronk, Voltaire Foundation

Primary texts

- (i) Michel Foucault, 'Qu'est-ce qu'un auteur' (1969); English trans. in The Foucault Reader, ed. P. Rabonow (1984)
- (ii) [Voltaire], Contes de Guillaume Vadé (1764) [find one of the original editions in the Voltaire Room, and look at how different parts of the anthology are signed]
- (iii) [Paul Desforges-Maillard], Poésies de Mlle Malcrais de la Vigne (1735) [various editions available in Taylor – who is (s)he?]
- (iv) Novikov & Catherine II: a selection of periodical articles [a xerox will be circulated]

Questions for presentations/written work

How do one or more authors construct a specific notion of authorship?

Discuss the strategic use made by an author of one or more pseudonyms.

What are the uses of anonymity in eighteenth-century literary culture?

Wk.7: Fashioning a self-image (Catriona Seth, All Souls)

Primary texts

Jean-Jacques Rousseau, Les Confessions, Paris, Gallimard, Folio (or any other complete edition). – If you are reading it in English, use Angela Scholar's translation, edited by Patrick Coleman (Oxford, World's Classics, 2008).

Mary Robinson, Memoirs. To be found in vol. 7 of the Pickering and Chatto edition of her works, 2009-10, William D. Brewer, ed.

There is also an edition published by Dodo Press under the title Memoirs of Mary Robinson. "Perdita". There is also an online edition: <http://digital.library.upenn.edu/women/writers.html>

Primary iconography

Portrait of Jean-Jacques Rousseau by Allan Ramsay

Further Reading

You may wish to read more autobiographical texts of the period like Jeanne-Marie Roland's Mémoires, Louise-Elisabeth Vigée-Lebrun's Souvenirs, Carlo Gozzi's Memorie inutile or Benjamin Franklin's Autobiography.

Questions

How is the autobiographer both author and character? How does the autobiographer attempt to manipulate the reader? What are the layers of representation within an autobiographical text, from unconscious revelations to the autobiographer staging his or her own life? How do the public and private sphere overlap in an autobiography?
